OPEN DRIVE FOR FUNDS TO BUY BOYS UNIFORMS

Complete Outfits Will Be Purchased For Members Of Band Through Subscription.

A drive to raise $2,000 from residents of Gettysburg to purchase year-round and serviceable uniforms for members of the Boys' band was launched Tuesday evening when each of the seven members of the advisory board of the musical organization contributed $15.

The campaign will be for one week and each person contributing $15 will be given credit for purchasing a uniform for one of the young bandmen.

Since the organization a year ago, the band has been outfitted in white sailor suits, practical enough for summer, but impractical for fall and winter use. Although the color and quality of the new uniforms have not been decided upon, it is planned by the advisory board to purchase a three or four piece outfit, suitable for winter and summer.

The quality and style of the new uniforms depend entirely upon the generosity of local residents, members of the advisory board said.

The new uniforms will be the property of the citizens, members of the advisory board pointed out, and any member of the band who drops from the organization will be compelled to turn in his uniform.

The band, which is under the leadership of Professor Stenger, Hanover, with George Hamm, Gettysburg, as assistant, now numbers 65 pieces, and is rapidly gaining an excellent reputation here and elsewhere. "Gettysburg should feel proud of its Boys' band," a stranger said recently after seeing and hearing the young players.

Resides the 65 regular members, the band has a beginners' class of 35, and next spring the advisory board plans to add a drum corps.

Contributions to the uniform fund may be handed or sent to any member of the advisory board. Names of contributors will be published in The Gettysburg Times.

The advisory board comprises A. B. Plank, president; C. Ray Rupp, secretary; Edgar L. Deardorff, treasurer; James B. Aumen, business manager, and C. B. Dougherty, C. M. Wolf and Simon Redding, members.

William Grecht Tells of Grape Harvest Which is Going on in Germany Now

Resident Of Gettysburg Is Now At Schlitz, Ober-Hessen, Where Famous Rhine Wine Is Made After Large Grape Crop Has Been Gathered And Pressed; Tells Of Trip To Native Country In Letter To Times.

To be once more in the Rhine valley where his former friends and many of his kinsmen were busy gathering the grapes, carefully cultivated to be pressed and made into the famous Rhine wine, had long been the desire of William Grecht, of Springs avenue, and not until this year was he able to make arrangements to be present when the harvest takes place.

Mr. Grecht sailed for Germany on October 1 and since arriving at his former home has been an interested spectator in the festivities incident to the harvest.

In a letter to The Gettysburg Times, Mr. Grecht describes his present visit, his nineteenth to his native heath since he set up in business in this country.

The letter in full follows:
Schlitz, Ober-Hessen, Germany, October 31, 1927.

The Gettysburg Times:

"About the time the vacation season was over and most people who had been away returned to take up the duties of life anew, I started on my vacation, going again to my far away birthplace. This time I went mainly to see the harvesting of the grapes in the Rhine district. I had been on the Rhine quite often in the winter and several times in the spring. The last time I was there my people asked me to come when the grapes were being gathered, and I thought so well of the suggestion, I started for Europe this year on September 28, on the steamer Albert Ballin, of the Hamburg American line, which was built since the war. She is an oil burner of 22,000 tons, and has all the newest improvements for navigation, safety and comfort. I understand that there is now a system whereby the course of a ship for a whole day is set by the compass, which eliminates the necessity of a man during this period. It seemed wonderful to me but when they got into the English channel and North sea, they steered by hand.

11 Days On Ocean
"I had the finest trip across the North Atlantic ocean of all my crossings. The first three days were so pleasant that the passengers went without coats on the deck. The next four days were the average ocean weather and the last four days very beautiful. Going through the channel and the North sea the water looked like lace, so that one could rejoice and be glad, and say as did the Royal Psalmist 'the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament his handiwork.' There was very few passengers as it was between seasons; there were more men to man the ship (450) than passengers, who numbered about 350. The service and food were very satisfactory. The boat was not a fast one and it took us eleven days to get to Hamburg; most vessels take about eight days to make the run and when we are on the water this long we are anxious to get to harbor.

"We landed in Cuxhaven, which is about three hours ride by railway to Hamburg. Got into Hamburg late Sunday night. Hamburg is a wonderful city and one of the largest shipping ports in the world. The main harbor is like the trunk of a tree with branches that run off into a number of coves which are filled with ships from all parts of the world. I took a trip around the harbor in a motor boat and it took one and one half hours. I read a report of the Hamburg American line, which stated that before the war they had 175 vessels, about 950,000 tons, and after the war they had practically nothing. Now they have 165 vessels over 1,000,000 tons register, of their own and allied companies.

"The city surrounds the harbor, and away from the shipping there are so very many fine homes, and beautiful drives along the water front. The city is very attractive and the buildings are very fine examples of architectural beauty, none of them are plain. In 1900 I went to Hamburg to see relatives of my friend, Mr. Waidner, of Baltimore. I remember at that time they were so very much disappointed that we did not stay longer. The mother was quite elderly, being 68 years old, 27 years ago.

Visits Friends
"This time I looked up the son who has a business, and he invited me to his home for supper. After drinking coffee together, which is customary in Germany at 3:30 or 4 in the afternoon, he said 'we will now go along toward home and stop a few minutes at mother's as she is nervous.' At first I could not grasp the idea when he said mother, I thought he must mean stepmother, and was surprised to hear that his mother was still living, she is 95 years old. I had a very pleasant visit with her, and she was so glad to see me and did not want me to go, so I stayed a few days in Hamburg and then went to Cassel, where one of the castles or palaces of the once royal family, Wilhelm Hohe, is located. This castle has very fine grounds on which are all kinds of fine trees and shrubbery. Since the war lots of restrictions have been removed.

"However, I did not stop to see the palaces, but to see a friend and only stayed over night as I wanted to get the Rhine for the opening of the (Continued on Second Page)

FATHER OF SIX ON TRIAL FOR SELLING LIQUOR

Clarence Hilty, World War Veteran, Stands Trial For Selling Rum To Man At Home.

Clarence Hilty, South Washington street, World War veteran and father of six children, the oldest of them ten, was on trial here today, charged with illegal possession and sale of intoxicating liquor. A true bill on the charge was returned by the April grand jury.

Taking the stand in his own defense, shortly before noon, Hilty said he was wounded three times and gassed once while serving in France with the United States army, and is now a pensioner of the government by reason of his disabilities.

He denied emphatically that he had sold liquor to Paul Moritz on the night of February 19, the specific act for which he was arrested late that night by state and local police. Moritz had earlier in the case testified for District Attorney John P. Butt that he had purchased liquor in Hilty's kitchen. Hilty declared on the witness stand that Moritz had never been in his house, and that he had never had liquor in his possession nor sold liquor to anyone.

Prosecutor Butt called as common-law witnesses Dr. Henry Stewart, pathologist at the Warner hospital; George Aughinbaugh, high constable, who helped raid Hilty's home and arrest him; Paul Moritz, and Corporal Snyder, of the state police, who also assisted in the raid and arrest.

Just before court adjourned for the noon recess, Mrs. Hilty was on the stand.

Attorney William Hersh is representing Hilty.

The jurors in the case are Roger Keefe, E. P. Bream, S. G. Bigham, H. R. Stoops, R. H. Wilson, S. E. Allison, S. C. Lott, J. Milton Bender, Alvin A. Duttera, Herman Rife, C. W. Zeigler and Charles H. Richter.

Bilheimer Speaks At York Lions' Club

Director of Athletics at Gettysburg College Pleads For Understanding For Coaches.

A plea for understanding and sportsmanship from the public in regard to football teams and coaches was made by C. E. Bilheimer, director of athletics at Gettysburg college, and a former director of athletics at the York collegiate institute, when he spoke before the York Lions' club Tuesday noon in the Yorktowne ball room.

In giving his opinion on the greatness of teams and coaches, Prof. Bilheimer gave the Illinois and Georgia teams as his preference for championship honors this year, and Coach Bob Zupke, of Illinois, as the greatest coach in the game. He also mentioned "Tad" Jones, of Yale; "Pop" Warner, of Stanford; Knute Rockne, of Notre Dame, and Bill Roper, of Princeton, as being among the greatest of the country.

In making his plea for understanding from the football public, Professor Bilheimer stated that the gridiron is a great factor in forming character and producing ability in players, and quoted Red Grange as saying that next to being president of the United States, the job of coach is the hardest in the world, due to the panning received from the press and the public.

Supplies for Red Cross Drive are Stolen Sunday From Car by Sneak Thief

Membership Cards and Buttons Are Taken From The Rev. Harold Little's Car; Drive For New Members In Town And County Continues With Many Workers Securing Funds To Carry On Relief And Rehabilitation Work.

The forces of evil have invaded such a good and worthy cause as the 1927 annual Red Cross roll call in Adams county, but to no avail.

A quantity of membership cards, Red Cross buttons, posters and literature to be used in the roll call were stolen from the automobile of the Rev. J. Harold Little while the car was parked in front of the home of E. E. Slaybaugh, Broadway, with whom the minister resides, Sunday.

The Red Cross material was to have been used by the Rev. Mr. Little in presenting the roll call cause to his three congregations last Sunday, and the theft spurred him to greater efforts with the result that he secured thirty memberships and promises of many more. He is pastor of the Lutheran charge comprising the churches at the Pines, Hampton and Heidlersburg.

Short of Supplies

At the office of the Red Cross secretary in the court house it was said today that if the persons who took the roll call material will return it to the Rev. Mr. Little or to the headquarters no questions will be asked and no prosecution made. "We are short in our supplies as it is," Miss Margaret McMillan, secretary of the local Red Cross chapter, said, "and we would not like to have any of the material dissipated. None of the material stolen can be of any value to the thief."

Although many memberships are known to have been secured by the workers in Gettysburg and other communities in the county, only 25 memberships have been received at headquarters. The 25 memberships, however, have brought in $46 in cash.

Firemen Contribute

The Gettysburg fire company, which contributed $10, was the first organization to respond to the roll call, but fraternal and social organizations are expected to contribute later.

The first contributor in the first ward here was Mrs. William Bigham; Miss Mary Hay Himes, second ward, and Mrs. Eliza Johnson, third ward. Mrs. Clara Rebert, Cashtown, was the first person outside of Gettysburg to join the Red Cross.

Other Gettysburg contributors follow:

Rogers, Mrs. Carl Oyler, Mrs. James Welkert, Miss Margaret Howard, Mrs. Howard Hartzel, Mrs. John Himes, Donald McPherson, Jr., Mrs. Morris Stansbury, Mrs. Eliza Johnson, Samuel Stanton, Jacob Stanton.

ACQUIT NAGLE OF MANSLAUGHTER IN ACCIDENT TRIAL

Jury Reaches Verdict After 11 Hours Deliberation On 19th Ballot, This Morning.

Harry J. Nagle, of York, today was acquitted of involuntary manslaughter by a jury which deliberated eleven hours.

The jury was locked up at 5 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, and reached its verdict at 4 o'clock this morning on the nineteenth ballot.

Although acquitting Nagle of being responsible for the death of Mrs. Walter J. Geigle, of Columbus, Ohio, in an automobile collision at the intersection of the Biglerville road and Howard avenue, September 15, the jurors placed the costs upon the defendant. The costs will be about $100, William Hersh, who represented Nagle, said.

Question of Leniency
After deliberating nearly two hours, the jury sent out word that it desired further instructions, and court was reconvened by Judge D. P. McPherson shortly before 7 o'clock Tuesday evening.

After the jurors had filed into the courtroom, they asked Judge McPherson if he would consider a recommendation of leniency if they found Nagle guilty. The court told the jury that he would give consideration to such a recommendation.

The jurors then asked Judge McPherson what the sentence for involuntary manslaughter is, but the court said he was not allowed to divulge such information. He also said he would not divulge the extent of the leniency he would show toward the defendant in sentencing him, if he were convicted. In closing, Judge McPherson informed the jurors as to the disposition of costs, and the jury returned to its deliberations.

Nagle Last Witness
Testimony in the case was in at 3 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, and shortly afterward Attorney Hersh began his closing plea. Nagle was the last witness called by the defense before it rested. He said he saw no machine approaching on Howard avenue as he was driving north on the Biglerville road.

As he passed the load of straw, driven by E. P. Hartman, of the county home, Nagle said he applied the brakes to his truck and was traveling about 10 miles an hour as he approached the intersection. His foot was still on the brake when the truck collided with the large sedan driven by Dr. P. D. Shriner, of Columbus.

William W. Bell, Gettysburg battlefield guide, who was in the Ohio car, was subpoenaed by the commonwealth, but was not called upon to testify. Attorney Hersh took advantage of the prosecution's unwillingness to place Bell on the stand, and the defense called Mr. Bell to the stand.

Guide Aids Defense
Mr. Bell's testimony that he warned Doctor Shriner of the dangerous road intersection contradicted the testimony of the Columbus physician that the guide had not warned him of the crossing. Mr. Bell also said the load of straw had just passed over the intersection when Doctor Shriner came out onto the Biglerville road.

District Attorney Butt called W. F. Jackson, of the state highway motor patrol, to the stand for the purpose of testifying to Nagle's reputation which he had investigated in York recently, but upon the protest of Attorney Hersh, Judge McPherson ruled that the witness was incompetent to give such testimony.

Mr. Butt also called Nagle to the stand, but after a side bar conference between attorneys and the court, he was dismissed without testifying.

EXCAVATE FOR STEEL HANGARS

A crew of workmen is engaged in the excavation work at the Gettysburg Airport preparatory to the erection of a large hangar. The steel for the hangar has been shipped from the steel mills and is expected to arrive in Gettysburg some time this week. The excavation work will have been completed when the steel arrives and the steel girders will be ready to be placed. The hangar will front on the battlefield avenue and will be large enough to house six ships. C. A. Whyte, of the Ironclad, Inc., Washington, D. C., is in charge of the construction work here.

Fall housecleaning is at hand. If you have any article of home equipment for which you have no further use, bring or send an advertisement to The Gettysburg Times office for the classified column. BELL PARDON IS ASKED OF BOARD

Harrisburg, Nov. 16.—(AP)—Pleading that John A. Bell, Allegheny county banker, who was convicted in 1926 of embezzlement, be pardoned on account of his paralytic condition and because under the parole act he is theoretically not under control of the Allegheny county court, O. J. Eaton today asked the state pardon board to free the 73-year-old bankrupt.

The plea for a pardon was vigorously opposed by Homer Young, representing the Carnegie trust company of which Bell was president, whose depositors received about 10 per cent in the settlement of the bank's affairs.

Wilmington, Nov. 16.—(AP)—The News today reported that negroes of Eastern Maryland, had regained their composure after three days of terror while the body of Eleanor Potter, 38-year-old negroess, alleged to have foretold her death, awaited burial.

Last Thursday the woman announced a vision picturing her death and burial. Apparently in good health she made arrangements for her death and on Saturday morning revealed to her husband that she had money hidden away in a trunk for funeral expenses. She died that afternoon.

$31,657 IS COUNTY GAS TAX BILL

Harrisburg, Nov. 16.—(AP)—Collections of the gasoline tax for the quarter ending September 30, totalled $5,804,832, State Treasurer Lewis announced today. Of this amount, $650,000 represented collections at 2 cents a gallon which had not received for the quarter ending June 30 when the books were closed.

Collections by counties under the 3 cents tax included Adams, $31,657; Franklin, $45,280.

SAYS STORK AND CARS COMPETE

Providence, R. I., Nov. 16.—(AP)—Automobiles are competing with stork in the opinion of Dr. H. D. Jordan, superintendent of the Providence lying in hospital. The city birth rate he finds was lower last year than in 1925 and probably will be lower this year than last.

Some of this decrease, he believed, may be accounted for by the fact that many persons unable to afford both automobiles and children prefer to own automobiles.

There is just one place in America where we could use Mussolini and that's in the oil industry.

NON-STOP FLIGHT TO INDIA BEGINS

McIntosh and Hinkler Begin Trip in Hope of Establishing Long Distance Record.

Upavon, England, Nov. 16.—(AP)—Speeding eastward over sea, mountain, desert and city, two British air-men, Capt. R. H. McIntosh and Bert Hinkler, test pilot, are attempting to achieve the first non-stop flight to India.

Flying in the Princess Xenia, the same plane in which he made an unsuccessful effort to span the Atlantic to the United States early this fall, Captain McIntosh hopes to establish a new non-stop long-distance record, replacing the one made by Clarence D. Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine on their trans-Atlantic flight to Germany. The distance between England and Karachi, India, objective of the flight, is more than 4,000 miles, whereas the distance covered by Chamberlin and Levine has been computed at 3,905 miles.

The two flyers took off shortly after 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon with 800 gallons of gasoline in their tanks and plenty of provisions for their long air journey. Weather conditions were excellent when they hopped off in their Fokker plane, but weather charts showed that they were likely to encounter rain, snow and mists over the continent. Beyond that fair weather was predicted.

William Grecht Tells Of Grape Harvest Which Is Going On In Germany

grape cutting. I had written for information as to the time the grape cutting began, and one told me October 1, and another October 15. I arrived in Framersheim on the night of the twelfth of October and the next morning was the official time, set by the town council, for the gathering. When the grapes are about ripe guards are appointed for about two months, and no one is allowed to go to his or her vineyard, only for several hours two days each week, until grape cutting time. On the morning of the opening I thought there would be a great festival, such as band playing, ringing of church bells, and the school children marching and singing, but there was nothing like this as the old custom has been discontinued.

"The weather had been unfavorable for digging potatoes for some time, but about the time I arrived it was getting dry, so the people all got busy digging potatoes for three or four days, and then they started on the grapes. The grape crop was not good this year on account of unfavorable weather during the blooming time. Their spring was late and cool like ours in Pennsylvania and on account of this the grapes were small and not very sweet. My cousin has some fair quality land which is favorably located and he got about 500 quarts of wine. They will sell 300 to 400 quarts and use the rest in the family. Grapes are raised mainly on poor, hilly land, and they are planted somewhat closer than our corn. They require a great deal of work and attention; the vines are trimmed down every year to two little branches. The main vine is from one year up to one hundred years or more old. Some people have quite a number of acres in grapes for wine, and many have a hundred or more people cutting for nearly a month. They say it does not injure the grapes to have them frosted or slightly frozen.

"In the morning they take a wagon, which is drawn by horses or cows, to the vineyards, a distance of one to two and half miles. The grapes are gathered in buckets; then put in flat barrels, which have two straps on them, and these are carried by the cutters on their backs to the wagons, on which are casks 5 feet long and 3 feet deep to hold the grapes. Some people carry their dinner with them and others have it brought. My cousin had five cutters and his wife cooked the dinner, which consisted of a large quantity of potatoes (with the jackets on), meat, bread and coffee. I carried a large kettle of coffee, and my cousin's wife carried a heavy basket of food on her head. I wanted to carry it, but she would not let me. The men all enjoyed the hot potatoes and coffee. They had the tub nearly full and were wondering in what they would put the cutting of the afternoon, when my cousin got up on top of the grapes and trod them down with his shoes and in this way made more room. They got home about 6 p. m., and had all the work finished by seven, as they have a hand press to crush the grapes. A short time after they put the grapes in a wine press. Some people sell their grapes and this year they brought a good price, 12 cents per pound. Their pound is 18 ounces, 2 ounces more than ours.

"One of my cousin's boys was confirmed last Easter, and it is customary for boys to start to learn a trade after confirmation. The boy went to a nearby village to learn the bakery trade. He is bound by contract for three and one-half years; three years is the regular time, but as he attends polytechnic school part of the time, he has to serve extra time to make up for it. He gets his board and 24c per week for the first year, 48c per week the second year, and 72c per week the third year. In former times the parents had to pay for boys when learning their trade and also furnish everything. I asked him if he got anything in addition to his mark (24c) and he did not want to say, but when I pressed him for an answer he smiled and said when he made a mistake he got a good whack on the ear. Another young man told me when he was learning his trade, the head cook used a big fork on him when he was angry. He had the cook arrested, but the young man went to the hospital. However, things are getting better here in Germany.

"I spent three days at Bacarach, which is just a few miles below Bingen. Grapes in this section were a failure this year, but the other crops such as apples, prunes, plums, potatoes, sugar beets, etc., were very good. Conditions here are better now than they were last January, when so many people were out of work. I heard no complaints from the rank and file of the people, but those in business, large farmers and trades people, say that whilst business is satisfactory, the taxation is very grievous.

"Have been in Schlitz, my birth place, five days now, and enjoy my stay very much as I know so many people here. The weather is very beautiful; no frost as yet and many flowers are blooming, which seems very unusual at this time of the year.

"Very soon now my stay will come to an end, and I shall return again to my own home on Springs avenue, and all my good friends and acquaintances. I shall be glad, and trust in the Lord's kind protection for a safe journey home."

Very truly,
(Signed) William Grecht.

FISHER TO PROBE MINE CONDITIONS

Harrisburg, Nov. 16.—(AP)—Governor Fisher today indicated that he would order an investigation of conditions in the West Pennsylvania bituminous coal district with special reference to certain unnamed matters which were called to his attention by a delegation of labor leaders headed by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The governor said that he had been keeping in close touch with conditions in the soft coal fields where 85,000 men are on a strike, but that a report on conditions submitted by Mr. Green had called "new matters" to his attention which require intensification of the present inquiry.

SALESMAN IS CRASH VICTIM

York, Nov. 16.—(AP)—When two automobiles collided on the Lincoln Highway near here today, Samuel A. Roseman, 52, a tobacco merchant of Red Lion, was killed and two other persons were injured.

The injured are Queeder Grimm, of Red Lion, whose right arm was broken, and John Kessler, Yorkshire, who suffered a broken jaw.

The automobiles collided in the fog at a point where one way traffic only was permitted because of the laying of mains for the York Water company.

Dolores Costello in "OLD SAN FRANCISCO" is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
The broad acres of Don Hernandez Vasquez and his beautiful granddaughter Dolores are coveted by Buckwell, San Francisco political boss. His lawyer, Brandon, fails to induce Vasquez to sell. Brandon's nephew, Terry, falls in love with Dolores. Buckwell plans to void the Vasquez land grant. Terry warns Vasquez and offers aid. Vasquez won't listen and tells him Dolores must marry young Spaniard, Don Luis. Terry, heartbroken, leaves without seeing Dolores, and plans flight of forgetfulness in Frisco's Barbary Coast. Dolores is hurt by Terry's action, but scallions pride and goes into Frisco to seek Terry's aid in saving ranch.

Dolores nodded in relief, although she did not like the implication of the word party.
"I'm waiting on his table," explained the waiter. "Just go right on up these stairs and open the first door to your left."
"Thank you," and relieved of all misgivings, she followed his directions.
Reaching room 10, Dolores started to open the door, then released the knob and knocked instead. She knocked until her hand hurt, but could not summon sufficient courage to open a strange door unbidden.
The walls of The Poodle Dog were made to keep in all sounds, so she did not hear the music, singing and general boisterousness within. But one of the men guests, who was less intoxicated than anyone present, happened to be leaving and opened the door as if in response to her knock.

To Dolores' amazement he put his arm around her waist.

"I am looking for Terry," she explained, not conscious of having used his given name.

"You belong to this party—and are just getting here!" exclaimed the youth in open admiration. "I thought something was lacking, and now I know what it was—you! Come on in!"

To Dolores' amazement he put his arm around her waist and tried to draw her into the room. Breathless with fury, she pushed him aside.

The party was exposed to her view. She recoiled and stood in breathless horror, looking into the room. How different from what she had anticipated!

Dinner was over, although some of the men and girls were still lounging around the table in familiar intoxication. The dancing was fast and furious or so slow that the dreamy couples got in everyone else's way. Dolores felt that she was peering into another world—a place peopled by creatures with whom she did not care to mingle. In the midst of the hideous revelation she saw Terry—her handsome, clean, clear-eyed Terry—he had a girl in his arms and was dancing the "Grizzly Bear" with stumbling feet.

As each couple caught sight of Dolores they stopped whatever they were doing and looked at her through bleary eyes and swirling brains. She resembled a picture of some beautiful, frightened girl in a story book, and they wondered what she was doing there. Terry had stopped dancing and was holding his silk hat high above his head for a girl to kick at when he, too, caught sight of Dolores in the doorway. Tossing the hat aside, he staggered forward, scarcely crediting his vision. The discarded partner, drunkenly jealous of a new flame, tried to pull him back but lurching forward, Terry unsteadily approached Dolores and made a pitiful attempt to smile.

Hurt surprise changed to contempt when she realized his condition.

"What chow doin' eer?" Terry managed to get out.

Dolores did not turn away, but she closed her eyes to blot out the repulsive sight before her. His hair was mussed and moist, his eyes were bloodshot, his face looked swollen and white, and his collar was crumpled over in a soiled wilt.

"I thought I could depend upon you," Dolores drew herself up to her full height and spoke with a bitterness beyond her years. "But Grandfather was right—blood will tell."

Terry was too dazed to take in what she said, but he had sobered enough to be ashamed. "I'm sorry—I apologize!" came forth brokenly, as if that was sufficient.

Dolores shook her head and stared from Terry to the girls and men who had gathered around the doorway. Then she turned and proudly swept out of the room and down the stairs without saying another word.

No girl ever had a more disillusioning first trip to a city she had dreamed about for years. From an all concealing nook in the hallway Chris Buckwell had been an interested accidental spectator from the time he came out of an adjoining private room when Dolores knocked on the door. He had no idea who she was but her exceptional beauty and youthful innocence warned that she was worth watching while in The Poodle Dog alone.

Her handling of the situation brought forth Buckwell's admiration. His eyes glistened and he smiled shrewdly at Terry's predicament. As soon as Dolores started down stairs Buckwell sauntered from his shadow and nonchalantly followed. He wanted to know who she was and where she was going, but would not condescend to ask Terry.

Buckwell reached the entrance door just as Dolores stepped into her carriage and the glaring lights of the cafe afforded a splendid chance for him to again sense her utter loveliness as well as to see the Vasquez crest and name on the carriage door. With a low whistle of surprise he turned back into the hall, a frown on his usually inscrutable brow. Hearing a commotion at the head of the stairs he looked up and saw Terry struggling to break away from the frantic grasp of a girl. "Don't be a fool," he heard her shout. "Can't you see she didn't appreciate you—stay with us!"

Terry did not pay any attention to her. He wanted to talk with Dolores again before she got away. Pulling his arm loose he lost his balance, lurched forward and fell headlong downstairs, rolling and slipping, over and over until he hit the floor below.

Buckwell jumped aside in time to help him recover a footing. Fortunately Terry was only badly bruised and very much sobered up. "Well, if that is old Vasquez's granddaughter," consoled Buckwell with a mocking smile, "I don't blame you for your haste."

"Go to the devil, will you!" snarled Terry, and staggering to the open door found that Dolores had disappeared.

Utterly despondent and disgusted he tottered into the bar room and gulped down a drink of straight whiskey.

He could not think what had brought Dolores to The Poodle Dog. "Engaged to one man, flirted with me and visiting this place alone at night—and she said she had never been to Frisco! What kind of a girl is she?" Terry gave it up but he could not drive her from his thoughts even with an excess of liquor.

Out in the hall Buckwell watched with the same leering satisfied smile. Although his eyes were on Terry, his thoughts—like Terry's—were on Dolores. Good white women had never had any appeal for Buckwell. He preferred—well, the others. After seeing Dolores his desires were changed; he wanted her. And to use a well known expression of the time, "When Chris Buckwell wanted anything—he got it." Not five minutes later Buckwell had instructed his man to drop the Vasquez ranch matter—he was going to give it his personal attention.

Dolores rode on back to the Rancho and was thankful there was no one to witness her tears. She had never imagined it possible for anyone to be so miserable. Had she only known what the future held her suffering would have paled to insignificance beside the appalling tragedies that were destined to befall her during the next few days.

CHAPTER IX

Buckwell Sets His Trap
The momentary glimpse of Dolores that Buckwell enjoyed during her ill advised visit to The Poodle Dog in search of Terry had aroused the czar of the Tenderloin as nothing else had done in years. Women were not new to him, neither did they offer any pleasure to his jaded appetite. But with Dolores it was different. Her fresh beauty, her youth, her innocence appealed to him as sparkling water to a desert traveler—and as satisfying.

3 BANDITS GET 220-YEAR TERMS

Philadelphia, Nov. 16.—Grinning unconcernedly and nonchalantly chewing gum, three young bandits with slicked back hair and "sheikish" mien were sentenced to spend a total of 220 years in Eastern penitentiary yesterday by Judge Howard A. Davis, in quarter sessions court No. 1.

Two of the youths, Patrick Kane, 24, of South Fifty-eighth street, and Leo Lawler, 20, of Gibson avenue, were sentenced to terms of not less than forty and not more than eighty years. The third, Warren Conkling, 20, of South Allison street, was sentenced to not less than thirty and not more than sixty years.

Judge Davis passed sentence after the youths, smiling broadly and evidently pleased at the notoriety that followed their crimes and arrest, pleaded guilty to twenty-one bills of indictment. They were charged with fourteen hold-ups and the larceny of four automobiles.

Gray Broke Record In Death Balloon

Washington, Nov. 16.—(Special)—What he failed to do in life, Captain Hawthorne Gray, army balloonist, accomplished in death. The bureau of standards announced yesterday that instruments he carried on his last flight showed an altitude of 42,470 feet, a new world record.

Strangely enough, the altitude was identical to the foot to that made by Gray on a former attempt to set the record, but which was disallowed because he had to descend in a parachute.

Gray's record betters by about 7,000 feet that of Suring and Berson, German balloonists, who reached 35,424 feet.

It is hoped to restore the house occupied by Napoleon in Elba, which recently collapsed.

Out of the Past

Happenings of Days Gone by as Chronicled in The Star and Sentinel and The Gettysburg Times, the Files Reveal.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

Local Miscellany.—Institute next week.

The butchers of town are paying 7 1/2 cents per pound for pork.
 T. J. Weinberger put a new tin roof on Hotel Gettysburg last week.
 On Saturday last, the directors of the poor sold the property of Miss Maria Cowen on Long Lane to Rev. W. O. Lyles for $150.

Doing A Thriving Business.—Probably the most flourishing institution in Gettysburg at the present time is the soap factory.

During the past two weeks the company has sold and shipped ten tons of laundry soap, five tons of it going to a wholesale grocery firm in Jacksonville, Fla. Besides these large orders a number of small orders are being filled.

Owing to the great demand for soap the company is compelled to enlarge its plant and an addition 30x50 is now in course of construction.

Daughters of Liberty Banquet.—Betsy Ross Council 119, Daughters of Liberty, held their eighth annual banquet last Tuesday evening. About 125 persons were present, including members of the order and its invited guests, and a very enjoyable evening was spent by all present. Mrs. E. P. Sachs presided, and the following program was rendered.

Singing "America," followed by an address of welcome by J. Frank Dougherty; "The Flag that Betsy Made," by Miss Mary Young; "Star Spangled Banner," by the order, after which a report was made by William H. Frey, and the "Maid of Gettysburg" was given by Mrs. Jennie Andrews. The program closed with "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

Immediately after the strains died away Mrs. J. Frank Dougherty, chairman of the banquet committee, escorted all to the banquet hall, where tables were laden with all the delicacies of the season.

The rooms were tastefully decorated with flags, palms and flowers.

Improvements.—Architect J. A. Dempwolf was in town the forepart of last week and inspected the building owned and occupied by the L. M. Allemen Hardware company with a view to make drawings for a complete change. The improvements contemplated will include a three story brick building in the rear to extend to the alley running north and south, thus adding more space to the already large rooms of the second and third stories. The third story will be used for storing carriages, while the grocery department will be removed to the basement. An elevator will likely be put in and other changes made.

SHIRKING

It is my pleasure now and then to stray the links with golfing men, Or when the snow's on field and ridge
 I like a friendly game of bridge, Or, left alone, within a nook
 I can be happy with a book. Oh, need I set it down in rhyme
 I've many ways to spend my time.

'Tis not the joys of life which irk, The only tyrant here is work. And while my task's not really hard
 I find, somehow, that I regard Its sharp insistence day by day
 As interference with my play, Why should I toil the whole day through
 When there's so much I'd rather do?

I've noticed sitting by the pane Of some swift moving railroad train
 Instead of tilling up the land The farmers at a fence rail stand, Letting the useful minutes fly Merely to watch the cars go by,
 Preferring that beyond a doubt To rooting last year's corn stalks out.

Oh, how men waste their time, I say. And yet I know with every day
 Temptation swings me from my course Later to fill me with remorse.
 I find I'd rather read than write, Rather play bridge with friends at night.
 In truth, I have this mental quirk, It is so easy not to work.

Some miscreant stole the coupling pin from the Tickville train Tuesday just after it stopped at Bounding Billows. On account of the up grade from there on the engineer borrowed Mrs. Sim Flinders' clothes line and made temporary repairs to keep the train on schedule and not disappoint the passengers in the coach.

The Rye Straw storekeeper is complaining of hard luck. He sold the one-legged man at half price what he thought was an odd left pre-war leather shoe size 11-E and the very next day behind the sorghum barrel he discovered the other one.

Jacob Shoemaker and family left this morning for Baltimore, where Mr. Shoemaker has leased the Western Maryland hotel, near Hillen station.

"Did you know, Bunnikins?" enquired the Old Brown Horse, on whom the little rabbit was making a call, as I mentioned in the last story, "that zebras and donkeys are related to the horse?"

"No, I didn't," admitted the truthful little bunny.
 "Well, they are, although they differ in form and habit," answered the old horse. "Their tails are very different from those of the horse. The horse's tail is covered with long hairs, while the tails of zebras and donkeys have only a tuft of long hairs at the tip. Also, a horse's mane is longer and more flowing, and his ears shorter and his head smaller."

"Oh, I know his ears are shorter," laughed the little bunny. "I guess my ears are as long as a donkey's."

"Just about," answered the Old Brown Horse thoughtfully as he whisked a fly from his side with his tail. "Want to hear more about horses, Bunnikins?"

"Yes, please tell me more," cried the little bunny.

"Well, little Hipperty Hop, horses are now found in almost all of the inhabited parts of the globe, and the changes which have taken place in their form have been due, to a great extent, to the usage to which man has put them. Take the Shetland pony. He is small because he has had little chance to improve in height on account of the hard climate of the land in which he lives. The thoroughbred racer has received all the care and good feeding to make a fine horse, and he is bred and trained for speed. Then there is the big dray horse, which is used to draw heavy loads at a slow pace."

"Are there no wild horses left anywhere?" asked the little rabbit.

"Oh, yes," answered the Old Brown Horse. "In Australia and South America, as in the early days of America, many of the horses brought into these countries escaped from their owners, and in the wilderness have increased to great herds, which roam about at will."

"Where does the zebra live?" asked the little bunny.

"Why, bless your little, twinkling nose!" laughed the Big Brown Horse. "The zebra lives in Africa. Do you know where Africa is?"

"Across the ocean," answered the little bunny.

"Well, I'll say so," said the old steed. "Thousands of miles away. Africa is a continent, you know."

"Is the zebra a first cousin of yours?" asked the little rabbit.

"I am not positive that he's a first cousin," replied the Old Brown Horse. "But we are related. A zebra is the striped ass of Africa. His color is white, with dark stripes covering the body and legs. Zebras wander about in large herds, for as yet man has made little use of them as beasts of burden. Then there are the wild asses of Asia, which roam in small herds on the plains of Syria, in many parts of Persia and the northwest portion of India. Yes, Bunnikins, the horse family is spread all over the world. In fact, ages ago in Egypt the donkey was domesticated long before the horse, and carried burdens on his back as well as horses."

Army and Navy Breaking Down Red Tape Barriers

Rear Admiral Thomas P. Magruder (left), after being forgiven for his first attack on Navy system, has launched forth with another one, while Major General Charles P. Summerall (right) has been silenced in his criticism of Army barracks conditions.

The Army and the Navy are bringing up their big guns, and a concerted bombardment on official red tape and official malingering is getting under way.

Rear Admiral Thomas P. Magruder started the ball a-rolling. He came right out in public with a devastating criticism of Navy waste. He was forgiven by the administration and kept clear of a court-martial, and just when the incident was being forgotten, he burst forth with another and hotter arraignment.

This time Magruder, it seems, is almost certain to be subjected to a court-martial, which may result not only in an official reprimand, but in possibly more severe punishment.

Then there's the case of Major General Charles P. Summerall. Sent out West to investigate barracks conditions, he did his job thoroughly. Altogether too thoroughly to please certain politicians. Summerall charged that Army housing was high-grade enough for cattle.

President Coolidge quickly called him back from his trip. And Summerall, being a good soldier, has stopped his broadside.

But indications are that the old gag rule in force in both service departments, preventing officers and men from speaking their minds, is going to be a thing of the past.

REBUILDING OF SECTION BEGUN

Two More Bodies Are Found by Rescuers Making Total 23 Now.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 16.—(AP)—Under the glare of floodlights search for additional victims of Monday's gas tank explosion went forward last night in the ruins of the devastated lower North Side district.

Hundreds of workmen cleaned up tons of debris, but only two bodies were recovered, bringing the number of known deaths to twenty-three. Three of the victims have not been identified.

Rescue workers believed the fatalities would increase as the wreckage of the Pittsburgh Clay Pot company plants were cleared away.

32 Workers Still Missing
Officers of that concern, one of the greatest sufferers in the disaster that killed so many, injured 500 and caused property damage estimated at millions, announced that a revised check-up had revealed that thirty-two of 117 men who were at work in the plant at the time of the explosion were still missing. Six were killed outright, a dozen or so are in hospitals and about seventy reported themselves safe. It is assumed that of the thirty-two missing some will be found to have neglected to report.

Check-ups of employees at all other factories wrecked in the blast showed every man accounted for.

Great progress was made in removing the ruins of the Clay Pot company which immediately adjoined the huge Equitable Gas company tank that let go. It is estimated ten days must be spent in removing the ruins.

Two Accused of Looting

Accused of looting, Joseph Jorinski and Frank Linshu, both of whom live in the wrecked district, were arrested. At a hearing in a police court, the magistrate said to them:

"The offense with which you two are charged merits a penalty more severe than a $50 fine which the law empowers me to impose for a first offense. Therefore, I hold you for court."

Relatives will care for the five children of Mrs. Marie Congel, the only woman killed in the explosion, so far as known. Death came to her as she was at her household duties a block from the gas tank.

Rebuilding Work Begun

Residents of the desolated district surveyed the ruins with a calmer eye than had been possible yesterday and began the work of reconstruction, aided by a $100,000 emergency fund provided by the city council. A resolution was introduced in the council to use a part of the emergency fund to provide materials and workmen to repair the shattered dwellings. Mayor Kline, after looking over the district, said at least fifteen buildings would have to be torn down since they were a menace to life. The work of demolition was begun at once.

Some streets in the desolated area were cleared before night.

The number of automobiles in the state of New York now reaches nearly two million.
